

CLOCK IN 2026 / SOLANA MOBILE

STEAL A SEEKER

A reason to pick up your Seeker again.

Short heists. A reason to return.

Ishan Lakhwani · bluntbrain

Owning a Seeker is the start. Wanting to use it is the opportunity.

My bet: a game can be one of the first reasons to come back.

Easy to start

A clear goal and familiar touch controls.

Worth another try

An escape to master. A score to beat.

Something to return for

A collection to finish. A new weekly challenge.

The test: do players choose to open it again?

A simple input. A risky escape.

01 Tap the floor to move.

Use cover to choose your approach.

02 Tap an enemy to fire.

Stop the drone before it reports you.

03 Steal the phone. Escape.

Pickup brings the response.

Read the threat. Choose the response.

Patrol

Use cover. Move when it aims.

Scout drone

Interrupt its location broadcast.

Heavy

Get behind its protected front.

A REASON TO KEEP PLAYING

Twelve heists. Twelve phones to collect.

Early feedback is shaping the game.

“It is too easy in my opinion.”

What changed

Shared alerts and persistent pursuit.
Distinct enemy roles and counterplay.
Visual teaching for movement and combat.

What we still need to prove

Do new players understand the controls?
Does the challenge feel fair?
Do they return for another run?

Seven years of mobile work. A longer-term bet on Seeker.

What that means for this game

Teach through action, not a wall of text.
Make taps, hits and rewards feel responsive.
Use player feedback to improve the next release.

Steal a Seeker is my starting point.

I plan to keep building for Seeker—and learn which experiences people return to.

Give Seeker owners a reason to return.

On your Seeker, open the dApp Store and search “Steal a Seeker”.

Play the free campaign. Share honest feedback.
Help shape what I build next for Seeker.
